THE THREE HEADS (LES TROIS TÊTES)
by Chimère Orchestra

Not long ago, the Three Heads (the three spinners of human fate) wanted to play a game of chess against the Mechanical Turk: this automaton from the world of funfairs, built by the inventor of the metronome, is a (tricky) chess player.

The Mechanical Turk won and imposed a condition on these Three Heads: to stand ‘with both feet on the ground’, to be present alongside their creatures and to share in people’s everyday lives – wherever that may be, at any time of day, but always only for the limited duration of a single move …

Whatever we overlook with our own eyes, or whatever we choose not to see, is what this marionette will use to play its game. A merchant of oblivion, a carnival king, a jester who has escaped from the chessboard, a three-headed marionette and three monkeys playing music make up this revelrous procession.
